Meet our 5 TYPES OF FLOORING

Vinyl:

It is a highly durable material that last about 20 years. It has a wear layer on its surface, which makes it scratch & stain resistant.

Hardwood:

This material has many advantages due to its natural oils. It is weather & water-resistant, has a high coefficient of friction, is impenetrable to most insects, and is an easy-to-clean material that will provide a strong yet subtle surface that will last for decades.

Laminate:

This type of flooring is made up of multiple layers that add many features to the structure. As a finished product, this material resembles the look of wood, stone, or tile flooring. The surface laminate acts as a transparent coating, protecting the entire structure from wear, scratches, and water.

Engineered Hardwood:

This material is more resistant to temperature and humidity fluctuations than solid wood flooring. It offers a very durable and resistant finish that enhances its beauty and quality.

Composite Flooring:

It is the fastest-growing alternative to wood decking on the market. Its major advantage is that it has a core and cover that makes it resistant to moisture, weathering, and fading.
